Today ten years ago (22 Nov 2014) marked the final when squash featured at the Asian Beach Games. A showcourt was constructed on Karon beach at Phuket, Thailand. Harinder Pal Sandhu of India and Liu Tsz-Ling from Hong Kong (pictured below) claimed the gold medals, with entries coming from China, Hong Kong, Indonesia, India, Philippines, Pakistan, Thailand, Iran and Qatar. Matches were played to a shortened seven-point, best-of-three-game format, taking place after sunset.

In 1988 the ISRF (now WSF) reported on progress towards getting a place on the Olympic Games programme in 1992. The 1992 brochure and info on other bids is at <https://www.squashlibrary.info/olympic-games> on the Library website. World Squash Federation/PSA Squash Tour

We still await any news from the organisers of the 1992 summer Olympic Games in Barcelona to our request for demonstration or exhibition status at this event.

Other sports e.g. Sky-diving, have made similar presentations and the competition between these non-Olympic sports is very intense.

Whilst we wait, our member nations continue to lobby their own National Olympic Committees in an effort to convince the sporting world that squash is now an established and truly international sport.

When Lujan Palacios took gold in the PanAmerican Junior individual in 2018 she was the first player from Paraguay to win a PanAmerican Junior title, team or individual. But it was not a one-off as in Quito this month 16-year-old Fiorella Gatti repeated the feat for Paraguay – and added the junior women’s doubles title too, with Nicol Krauch. Perhaps the opening of a national squash centre in Asuncion in 2013 is a contributory factor to this stunning success set against the strong nations from across North, Central and South America. Just after the Tokyo Olympics, on 9 August 2021, the Times newspaper in UK asked their sports correspondents which sports should be added. Three of the six said squash.

Sum up this Olympics in five words	Matt Dickinson Sport triumphs over worst doubts	Matt Lawton Once in a lifetime experience	Rick Broadbent Covid, fearless, fast, brilliant, Biles
Sport that should be dropped from the schedule	Walking races. Nonsense almost-running.	Golf. A nonsense. Only if the Olympics represent the pinnacle should a sport be included.	Football. The most overexposed, overtypified sport could probably have a fortnight off.
Sport that should be added	A hardcore ultra-marathon. Proper running.	Cross-country running. A very different discipline, although should probably be in the Winter Games.	Squash – It's a nonsense it's not in. Would be the pinnacle of the sport.
Sum up this Olympics in five words	James Gheerbrant Humbling, inspiring, uplifting, sweetening, echoing	Mark Palmer Much more enjoyable than expected	Rebecca Myers One we will never forget
Sport that should be dropped from the schedule	Men's football. It needn't be the pinnacle, but it should be meaningful. Not a contextless, convoluted mess.	3x3 basketball. The full version is an integral part of the Olympics; this feels insubstantial.	Rhythmic gymnastics or artistic swimming. Let men compete as well or drop them.
Sport that should be added	Squash, obviously. Futsal in place of men's football.	Squash. Overlooked due to perceived lack of fan appeal but player numbers worldwide can no longer be ignored.	Netball. It's popular at grassroots level, and GB repeating that Commonwealth gold in 2018 would be special.

Just as all-transparent courts came on line, the Australian Squash Association applied to have squash included in the 1982 Commonwealth Games to be played in Brisbane (minimalist logo below), using details supplied to the IOC in respect to the possibility of squash securing a place in the 1984 Olympic Games. At the time it was thought that 'the prospect is extremely positive'. (Squash did debut in the Commonwealth Games in 1998 but a place on the Olympic Games programme still eludes squash). The retirement of Roger Federer prompts the memory that in 2013 the tennis star backed squash to be added to the Olympic Games programme in 2020.

"I think it's a wonderful sport. It's unfortunate some sports don't get the opportunity to be in the Olympics," said Federer. "I think squash would deserve it. They run a great tour and they have great players and characters. I'd personally be very happy for them."

Meeting up with then women's squash world No1 Nicol David at the ABN AMRO World Tennis Tournament in Rotterdam, Federer expressed his support to David and revealed he played the sport growing up.

"I used to play it a lot when I was younger every Sunday with my dad," Federer said. "I started with a wooden racket like I did in tennis. I've always been a big fan of the sport." Squash was first played in the Commonwealth Games programme in Malaysia in 1998, and here Geoff Hunt reviews his experience as Australian coach in Kuala Lumpur in a national coaching publication shortly afterwards.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES - THE COACHES' EXPERIENCE

BY GEOFF HUNT

As a full time coach of 15 years, I have experienced some interesting and wonderful occasions but the 1998 Kuala Lumpur Commonwealth Games must rate as one of the best. I was excited to be selected as one of two Australian coaches for the Games, especially as it was the first time Squash has been included.

A month prior to the Games, Australia sent a team to Kuala Lumpur to compete in the Malaysian Doubles Championships and gain much needed competition in doubles. Once we arrived at the Squash Complex (the Commonwealth Games venue), the full impact of what was to come was more obvious to us all.

The Squash stadium is absolutely fantastic, especially the all-glass match court. I could not help but get excited about the Malaysian doubles competition and the Games to follow. The squash centre was a stone's throw from the Gymnastics, Swimming and Main Stadiums.

When the Commonwealth Games came around and despite having already been to the Game's site, I was not quite prepared for the atmosphere once the team arrived in the Game's village.

All our team members were on a high, with the adrenaline flowing just walking around the village seeing all the other Games competitors and mixing with the other Aussies. Just seeing so many sporting greats was fabulous in itself.

Our men had matches the next day and were virtually straight into the competition. Unfortunately, their first games were so easy it was not particularly good preparation for the matches to come.

That night we had the Opening Ceremony. I have never experienced such euphoria in my life! After waiting an hour in the Gymnastics Stadium and 45 minutes lined up outside, we finally walked into the Main Stadium. It must have taken four or five minutes to walk around but it felt like just seconds before it was over. The atmosphere was absolutely electric!

The next day all players had to compete and most felt a little tired. This was due to the hype of the first few days, especially surrounding the Opening Ceremony.

The senior players were also a little uptight and nervous because they realised the importance of this event to Squash. There was unprecedented television coverage, including numerous interviews before the players even got to KL.

Dave Palmer was the only relaxed one because the pressure of the PSA tour and World ranking points was no longer there. Our other three male players did not play to their full potential, as each suffered to some extent by the extra tension of a Commonwealth Games.

Our four female players were also somewhat uptight but the experience of Sarah and Michelle in major championships saw them rise to the occasion. It was only the pressure of the final that saw Sarah finally succumb. It brought the best out of Michelle who played absolutely superbly.

After winning the Gold Medal, Michelle was so elated she had a permanent smile on her face for days. For those who saw the game and presentation on television, I am sure you would have noticed her excitement as well. Standing on the podium and receiving a gold medal, must have been a dream come true for Michelle and the most important win of her illustrious career.

There were many dignitaries who visited the squash at some stage during the Games, including the Prime Minister of Malaysia, Prince Edward and later on, the Duke of Edinburgh. Perhaps the most important from a squash perspective being IOC President, Juan Antonio Samaranch.

Surprisingly enough, after the singles the players settled in well to the doubles. Perhaps there was more pressure in the singles while the doubles was an unknown quantity.

All the players performed extremely well in the doubles with some great results for Australia. Overall it was a successful tournament for Australia and an experience I will never forget.

Geoff Hunt.

There he met IOC Thomas Bach (both pictured) as did more than 60 of the Young Ambassadors and reported, "He asked me about the squash in our region and I explained it is growing globally and in our continent too, with a better male and female pro tour, also new courts been build, specially mentioned the new public centres like ones in Paraguay or Colombia for example.

I asked him if he likes squash, and how real are the chances for the squash to be an Olympic Sport. He said to me that he knows and likes the squash, and he already put all of his effort to include squash into the Olympic Program (Olympic Games and Youth Olympic Games)'.

When Manchester won the right to host the Commonwealth Games 2002, the venue building programme included a National Squash Centre - which is being used for the Manchester Open this week. In addition to six courts (convertible to four doubles), it included a showcourt (also convertible to doubles), mounted on a hover-pad system.

This enabled it to move through the opening built into the adjacent indoor running track and seating to be built round it for over 2,000 spectators, as pictured (the top photo from the Games 2002 shows the court in the athletics area, with the bottom shot showing the black partition it had moved through to enter the squash area).

The Hong Kong Open in December 2012 was chosen by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) inspection event to determine which of the sports shortlisted should claim a place on the programme for the 2020 Olympiad.

There were two sparkling finals but also a sprinkling rain-affected semi-finals session outdoors on an all-glass show court erected at the Cultural Centre Piazza on the Hong Kong waterfront at Tsim Sha Tsui. Walter Sieber, one of the two IOC Programme Commission representatives, said: "We were able to make a very thorough inspection of the way the event was organised, taking into account the needs of the athletes and coaches. Naturally, we also wanted to assess how the glass court is helping to present the sport for broadcast purposes.

"We found that the competition arrangements were of a high level, and on court we were able to see the top players in action too. It has proven to be very informative."

The World Masters Games is reputedly the world's largest multi-sport event – there were 25,578 entries in Auckland 2017 - and squash has been a regular participant sport. The 2021 edition in Kansai, Japan has been postponed by a year, and the International Masters Games Association (IMGA) has awarded the 2025 Games to Taiwan. The first mainland Europeans to break the English stranglehold on the European Junior Individual (Under 19) titles, both did so when the event was staged in Oslo, Norway in 1992.

Finn Juha Raumolin beat Stefan Castelyn (BEL) 9-5, 9-7, 2-9, 9-2 to win the male event, while German Sabine Schoene was the female winner, with victory over England's Sally Felton 9-4, 9-4, 9-7.

There were high hopes that squash would have a presence in the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona, as indicated in this article from Richard Eaton in the Independent newspaper in UK on 5 October 1988. Unfortunately, as we know, the hopes were not realised. (WSF was called ISRF until 1992).

Delegation court an Olympic place

SQUASH may be moving towards a place in the next Olympics. The President of the International Olympic Committee, Juan Antonio Samaranch, has agreed to meet a delegation from the International Squash Rackets Federation next month.

The ISRF's president, Ronnie Sinclair, believes this means his sport will almost certainly gain exhibition status in Barcelona in 1992, and is particularly encouraged that squash, which has spread to every continent, has remained on an IOC shortlist of sports which has been reduced from 30 to 12, and now to six.

Although there have been calls for a reduction in the number of sports in the Olympics, several factors are working in favour of a Spanish debut for squash.

Spain itself is one of the fastest-growing squash nations of all, with King Juan Carlos a devotee and the Spanish Open having developed into a major Grand Prix tournament.

Spain will also provide a member of next month's ISRF delegation, Juan Dominguez Hocking, who is the manager of the national Olympic team.

Hocking has been a major figure in squash's development, and he will remind the IOC President that no construction will be necessary in Barcelona. More than enough facilities are already in place.

In 1973, the year of the formation of the European Squash Federation, as well as initiating the European Team Championship. There were discussions about initiating a European League too within five years too. The league didn't happen, but in 1980 a European Inter-Club Championship was begun, won that year by Swedish club SK Triangeln, Malmo.

Squash has only been in the African Games once – when it took place in Abuja, Nigeria in 2003.

Egypt dominated the podium, but Nigeria, South Africa and Zambia medalled too. The medallists

Squash isn't and can never be an activity such as skating or dancing, exciting though they are. Ours is an entirely different product, so where does that leave us? Should we take it on the chin and try again, mounting a really strong bid, again spending a great deal of money on it? Should we say never again? Or perhaps when the next round takes place for Los Angeles, should we just go through the motions and see how it pans out? There is also a small clamour for football

When the IOC brought in formal event inspection procedures to assess candidate sport's credentials, the first squash inspection took place at the Hong Kong Open on 1 / 2 December 2012 for the 2020 Olympic Games programme. As in some previous years an all-glass show court had been erected at the Cultural Centre Piazza on the Hong Kong waterfront at Tsim Sha Tsui. Walter Sieber, one of the two IOC Programme Commission representatives, said: "We found that the competition arrangements were of a high level, and on court we were able to see the top players in action too. It has proven to be very informative." The bid proved unsuccessful though, when the 2020 Games spot opened up by the IOC for a 'new' sport was given back to wrestling, which had been removed by them to make the space! In February 1986 the International Olympic Committee (IOC) granted official recognition to the ISRF (now WSF) - thus admitting squash into the Olympic movement. At that point the hope was that squash could try to become a demonstration sport for the Olympic Games in 1992 (Barcelona).

Squash bidding for a place on the Olympic Games programme is not new. Here is a page from the brochure produced by ISRF (the former name of WSF) in 1988 to try to get into Barcelona 1992.

Squash-an Olympic sport in Barcelona?

THE International Squash Rackets Federation and the Spanish Federation of Squash (FES) share the common goal of seeking squash's acceptance as a demonstration sport in Barcelona in 1992.

The case for squash, as stated by the ISRF, has been presented elsewhere and the FES would strongly argue that the development of the sport in Spain adds a lot of weight to the claim to be represented in Barcelona.

1. In the period from 1978 to 1987 the sport has grown from being virtually unknown to a level of 100,000 players and the projected number of players by 1992 is expected to approach one million.
2. In Barcelona there are already in existence a number of squash clubs capable of staging world class events, with further clubs expected to be completed by 1992.
3. Catalan is the region in Spain having the most clubs and Barcelona therefore is a logical centre for the staging of an Olympic squash event.
4. Spain has already organised events of world class and has experienced officials ready to co-operate with the Olympic Organising Committee.
5. Squash in Spain has reached its present level of development without State aid and is therefore shown to be an aggressive and capable sport.
6. The King of Spain is interested in squash and has twice received the officials of the FES.
7. The FES is well regarded by the International and European Squash Federations for its progress and development of squash.

OLYMPIC EVENT IN BARCELONA

THE ISRF envisage that an Olympic squash event in Barcelona would involve no more than 16 national teams selected from all the major squash playing regions of the world.

Such an event would be played over a five day period and would be self financing.

It is anticipated that the initial rounds would be played at the leading clubs in Barcelona and culminate in a grand final using a portable transparent court.
